Session Objectives

- Learning Objective: To support an adaptative leadership model that promotes ways to thrive during organizational evolution.
- At the end of this module, team members will be able to:
  - Learn to manage through complexities, contradictions, and paradoxes to reduce their impact.
  - Focus on the long-term good of the change, not short-term inconveniences.
  - Support and encourage experimentation with change.
  - Try new approaches, coordinating with other leaders in the organization.
  - Support the organization in adjusting activities based on results and feedback and be responsible for driving change processes where needed.
  - Enable the organization to adapt to a changing environment.

Understanding Change

- Planned vs. Unplanned
- Evolutionary (transactional) vs. Revolutionary (transformational)
- Content of change (what) vs. Process of change (how)
- Levels of Change
  - Individual: selection, training, development, coaching
  - Group: teambuilding, self-directed groups, inter-group
  - Organizational/Systems: broad strategy, culture, large group intervention, survey feedback, inter-organizational

Why Change Fails

"Our failure was not a lack of leadership from the main person in charge but from either a lack of ability or the lack of 'willingness' from other personnel who are needed to step up and truly lead the effort to bring the strategies from paper to production."

Why Change Really Fails

- Failure to make a complete case for change – people need to make sense of the change before they accept it
- Not involving the employees – leaders believe top-down still works
- Ignoring current organizational culture – failure to understand and shape the informal organization
- Real change happens at the bottom of the organization – it does not happen at the town hall meeting or through the intranet
- Not dealing proactively with resistance
- Failing to celebrate the small wins – change management is a dolphin, not a whale

Change Management Can Help…

- A structured approach to transitioning individuals, teams and organizations from the present state to the desired future state
- A process aimed at empowering employees to accept and embrace changes
- Building individual and organizational resiliency is critical to success
