Resilience System Design and Alignment to Standards

This resilience system has been designed by Risk and Strategic Management, Corp (RSM), a specialist company expert in designing and implementing complex resilience strategies which protect people, facilities, assets, information, operations and organizational reputation. This system has been aligned to the following ISO and BSI standards to ensure it reflects the professional standards and practices of High Reliability Organizations: ISO 31000: Risk management; ISO 22317: Business impact analysis; ISO 22301: Business continuity management; ISO 22320: Emergency management; ISO 34001: Security and resiliency; ISO 22316: Organizational resiliency; and BSI 17091: Crisis management.

Introduction

The ability for Security to fulfill their duties is in large measure dependent upon securing and maintaining the respect of those working at, or visiting, the office. The extent to which the respect and trust can be secured is significantly diminished when a member of the security team acts in an unprofessional, unlawful or unethical manner.

As the shop front of our facility, the personal conduct of security personnel is always under review and the team must be constantly mindful of the obligations to serve our staff and visitors in a mature, professional and friendly manner.

If in doubt, check

It is important for the guard force to make the right decisions (rather than popular decisions) during their day to day activities. If a decision or action has to be taken and the guard has a doubt about that decision then they should ask themselves:

- Is the action legally or ethically acceptable.
- Does the action violate any policy, plan, guide or protocol.
- Would I feel that I was being mistreated if I were treated this way.
- Would it create a problem if the action was known to internal or external parties.

Professional Standards

The following are the core guard force standards by which the team's professionalism will be judged.

Dress and Equipment

First impressions are often the most important and the appearance of a guard sets the expectations for those they come into contact with. A guard whose uniform is clean, ironed and well-presented will immediately generate confidence and respect in others. A guard whose uniform is dirty, ripped or not ironed will immediately create a poor impression, no matter what their qualifications, experience or capabilities. As such, guards must ensure that their dress reflects the high standards and professionalism they bring to their role. A high standard of individual dress reflects uniformity and professionalism within the security team. It indicates personal professional pride, and reflects their respect for the organization they support.

Guards may be issued equipment to support their role. It is the guard's responsibility to ensure that all equipment is inspected at the start of every shift to identify damages and faults. Guards must ensure they care for the equipment, ensure it is well serviced and maintained and that any faults or damages are immediately reported to their supervisor. A professional guard will ensure that they are always aware of the serviceability of the equipment they are issued to support their role. Guards must also understand how to use the equipment they are provided and can ask questions if they are in doubt over how equipment functions.

Public Liaison

Guards often perform a public liaison role; they can be the first contact a visitor or employee has with our team, and as such, the way in which the guard deals with visitors, contractors, or members of the local population can have a marked effect on these external parties' impression of the organization. In the case of local communities, poor impressions can detrimentally affect local acceptance, which is an important aspect of risk management. Because the guard is in frequent contact with employees, the guard should be capable of establishing good relations with them.

Punctuality

It is important that guards are always at their assigned places of duty on time. Often a guard may need to be briefed by those they are replacing during a shift handover, as such guards should always seek to arrive at least 15 minutes before the start of any shift to provide time for an adequate handover of the post. It demonstrates poor professional standards if a guard is late for their duty and will require other guards to cover their role until their arrival. This can undermine the overall morale of a guard force as well as be indicative of poor professional standards and weak management.

If a guard is running late then they must report this before their shift starts so that the managers can make timely adjustments or take actions to ensure that professional standards and service obligations are met.

Honesty and Integrity

A guard must be honest and trustworthy as they are responsible for the safety of those located within the facility they are hired to secure, as well as assets and information that may have organizational value. By always being honest, the guard force will build a reputation of having a high professional standard and establish a strong, enduring professional relationship with staff on-site.

Integrity is closely related to honesty, and describes the moral courage to act or make decisions that may be difficult and personally challenging to the guard in question. Integrity could be illustrated by an individual's willingness to own up to a mistake when it could easily have slipped a team mate's or supervisory manager's notice or been attributed to an innocent third party. Equally, integrity could relate to a guard's insistence that a senior member of staff who has mislaid their ID card, comply with access controls, and report the loss through the proper channels and wait at the access control point until an escorting member of the staff on-site are able to meet and vouch for them.

Discipline, Enthusiasm, and Professionalism

All guards must be diligent in their duties. Diligence means that a guard is continually working toward the assigned goals, making use of what resources and opportunities are available. Diligence makes a guard vigilant to avoid errors and to stay focused on the task at hand. A guard's diligence provides a basis for people trusting a guard. Diligence does not rely on talent, but employs commitment, professionalism, and perseverance to transform vision into reality.

Enthusiasm is the energy that a guard may use to perform their duties to the highest level of professional standards. Guards who look at their assigned task in a positive manner will spread enthusiasm to the rest of the guard force. By not being worried or bothered by distractions the guard can be focusing on the task and its success. It drives us to achieve the standards of our task.

A professional guard will always show respect to all and everyone they deal or speak with. This directly positively represents our team. At times staff and visitors may be aggressive, insulting or abusive towards guards; however, at no time should the guard respond in anything but a polite and professional manner. Guards should report any such incidents to their supervisor as staff and visitors are required to also show the guard force respect. Good interpersonal and problem-solving skills are a valuable asset for each guard as they may deal with occasions such as this on a regular basis depending on the type of facility that they may be working in and the environment in which it is located. Guards must always be seen as professional, regardless of the situation.

Gifts

No member of the guard force is permitted to accept any gift from a staff member, visitor or subcontractor, unless provided written permission from the most senior security representative of the facility.

Code of Conduct

The maintenance of professional standards is a priority for Security. One tool at their disposal is to provide the guards with a Code of Conduct, not only with sound task-related briefings and description of their Roles and Responsibilities, but also to ensure they have read, understood, and keep with them as an aide memoire on what expectations have been set for Security.

The Code of Conduct sets out in clear language the expectation Security. As well as being issued to guards individually as an aide memoire, copies of the Code of Conduct should be posted in fixed guard force locations. The management team might also select one of the points within the Code as a 'Thought for the Day', posted on guard force shift roster and notice boards. The Code of Conduct also provides supervisory managers with a sound framework within which to address lapses in professional standards, using it as the shared and acknowledged basis of how guards are to discharge their duties.

Guards will adhere to the following Code of Conduct:

- All guard personnel will act at all times with the highest degree of professionalism. Each guard will be vigilant and act courteously to all with whom they come in contact during the performance of their duties.
- All security personnel will protect everything within the limits of their duties and will not quit their post until properly replaced by another guard fully capable of carrying out all responsibilities of the post. Guards will report anything unusual to their supervisors immediately.
- All disputes and questions posed to guards that are not resolved on the scene are to be passed to senior security representative or the designated manager at the facility.

- Where appropriate or instructed, guards will maintain in a neat, orderly, legible fashion all log books, ledgers, registers, record books, incident reports, or any other written record of duties performed or of any security event – as issued by their supervisor.
- Guard force personnel will not offer or divulge any information about the organization, visitors, or subcontractor operations, activities or personnel to anyone.
- The relief guard will take the complete charge of duties from the off going guard they relieve – including the Post Log Books and all other equipment maintained at the post. The guard will confirm in the logbook that they have taken over all equipment in good order and that the post is clean and tidy with all litter removed.
- Guard force personnel will brief and pass on any special instructions to their relief personnel concerning outstanding or significant events that occurred during the previous shift.

Guard Force Standards and Post Orders

- The off going guard should remove all litter at the end of each shift in the bin bag provided, unless otherwise instructed. The oncoming guards should make a note in the duty log that all litter has been removed from the site by the off going guard.
- The guards will not remove any item from an office, room, or facility and grounds, except under the instructions of their Supervisor.
- Guards will remain alert and vigilant at all times. They will not nap or sleep on post, engage in personal conversations in person or on the telephone, read newspapers, watch TV, send emails or engage in any other social activities online, nor attend to any other personal business during duty hours.

Any personnel who is incapacitated, or who have consumed alcoholic beverages during this period will not be posted on duty and will face disciplinary action, including potential termination from employment. Guard force personnel will not drink alcoholic beverages off duty if in uniform.
- ☐ The relief by an intoxicated person is prohibited. If a guard has reason to believe that their relief is intoxicated then they will not allow themselves to be relieved and will immediately notify their supervisor or the designated manager and will only leave their post when instructed to do so by their superior or the designated manager.

Guard Force Orders

The responsibility of a guard is first and foremost to protect people. You are expected to ensure that those working at or visiting your location are protected from natural, humanmade and work-related hazards. Your responsibilities also include the protection of facilities, assets, materials, information and business operations at your location.

You must fully understand both your roles and responsibilities as a guard, as well as the specific technical functions and activities you will be required to carry out. If you do not understand these then it is your responsibility to immediately notify your manager and seek assistance.

In the course of your duties you may be confronted by serious incidents and emergency situations. Your role will be to take immediate response measures in order to control a threat and safeguard those people, assets, and information under your protection.

Professional standards (as set out in the Code of Conduct) are required as you represent the organization you are providing security for.

Where a search is authorized by an appropriate manager and then conducted the guard must explain to the person being searched that the search is for the protection of everyone, including the person being searched. At no time should men conduct a physical search of women. If a female searcher is not present then male searchers should ask women to remove external garments which may conceal unauthorized items, but they should not physically touch female visitors or staff. If a visitor refuses to be searched then they should be politely told they cannot enter the facility until a manager has been informed. A manager should also be called if a safety or security concern occurs.

Men check men, women check women... men do not check women, women do not check men.
